Reading Rock Stars brings authors to elementary schools in the Rio Grande Valley March 19 and 20

Nearly 4,000 children to receive new, autographed books of their own

AUSTIN—Texas Book Festival's Reading Rock Stars, a dynamic program that brings books to life for children in economically disadvantaged public schools across the state, will host seven exciting authors at six elementary schools in the Rio Grande Valley March 19 and 20. Authors will present their books in entertaining fashion, give each student an autographed copy, and present a set of books to each school's library. Participating schools follow a curriculum guide in preparation for the authors' visits.

Since 2001, Reading Rock Stars has donated more than 23,000 books to children at Title 1 schools in the Rio Grande Valley. For many children, it is the first book they have ever owned.

"Reading Rock Stars is one of the ways Texas Book Festival touches communities around the state," says Heidi Marquez Smith, executive director. "Many of the children we reach through this program have never been in contact with an author before, or owned a brand-new book. Reading Rock Stars helps bring books alive for kids and instills a lifelong love of reading, which in turn helps cultivate learning and creativity.”

According to Kendall Miller, who manages the Reading Rock Stars program for the Texas Book Festival, nearly 100 advanced teacher copies and curriculum guides, donated by publishers, will also be donated to participating schools. Following the author presentations, the teacher copies will also be given to the school libraries.

Reading Rock Stars in the Rio Grande Valley is presented in cooperation with the University of Texas Pan-Am and the university’s FESTIBA: Festival of International Books and Arts.
